

The Nebraska Game and Parks Commission reminds hunters to be cautious this fall when driving the state's rural roads.

Before it is harvested, tall corn may hamper visibility at intersections. Drivers should slow down at these intersections and take a second look before proceeding. Once the harvest begins, drivers can expect to encounter farm and ranch vehicles on these roads. Slow down when meeting these vehicles and, if necessary, move well to the right.

Hunters also are reminded that it is unlawful to shoot from a public highway, road or bridge, including the traveled surface and right-of-way, whether on foot or from a vehicle. Also, landowner permission is required to hunt on private land.
