Nebraska's jobless rate has fallen again—to its lowest point in several years.

State labor officials say the unemployment rate has finally dipped below 4 percent. For April, the rate reached 3.9 percent.

That's down one-tenth of a point from March and is the lowest number of Nebraska jobless since December of 2008.

The national unemployment rate also fell a-tenth of a point to just above 8 percent, which is more than twice Nebraska's rate.

Officials say Nebraska's jobless rate is now the second-lowest in the country, behind only North Dakota, which fell to 3 percent even.
